When ended was the lif of seynt Cecile,
 Ere we had fully riden fyve myle,
 At Boughtoun under Blee us gan oertake
 A man, that clothed was in clothes blake,
 And under that he ware a white array,
 His hackeney, that was a dapple grey,
 So swet, that it was wonder for to see,
 It semed he hadde prickèd myles three.

When Saint Cecilia's Life was done, and whiles
 We had not farther gone a good five miles,
 At Boughton-under-Blean us did o'ertake
 A man, who was clothed all in clothes of black,
 And underneath he had a surplice white.
 His hackney was of dappled-grey, so bright
 With sweat that it was marvelous to see;
 It seemed that he had spurred him for miles three.

Battle of Bossenden Wood took place on 31st May 1838, and was the last armed uprising on English soil. The leader called himself 'Sir William Courtenay'. His real name was John Nichols Tom (or Thom), and he was originally from Cornwall. He led a protest against the new Poor Law to assisting poor local agricultural workers in the area. Having killed the constable sent to arrest him, he & his band, were pursued into Bossenden Wood by soldiers of the 45th Foot. During the battle, many were killed. *Either spelling OK.

On the same day an inquest at the White Horse, Boughton, (ancient coaching inn noted in Canterbury Tales) returned verdicts of "justifiable homicide" on the deaths of Courtenay and his followers. 'Sir William' and 7 others are buried in Hernhill Church - but under his real name of John Tom. Two other rebels buried in Boughton Churchyard.
